When people interested in stone walls, patios or any other stone projects, visit A-Stone, they often look around for a male face to advise them. “The last thing they expect to see are women,” said Paula Abatacola-Corsi, who owns and operates Rhode Island’s largest stone provider with sister Linda Abatacola-Tusup. But as the sisters guide guests through the hundreds of choices, customers immediately feel at ease. “Because we’re knowledgeable about stone and its applications, we are just as comfortable talking with homeowners as we are with masons and architects. We understand their language.” It is a language taught to the sisters by their father, Arnold Abatacola, founder of A-Stone. “Our father always stressed the importance of customer service,” said Linda. Rhode Island’s only winner of the Marble Institute of America’s prestigious Pinnacle Award, A-Stone is the source for all your stone needs.
